All were pumping lead as fast as under the larger of their rides. Stung by his wounds, the hear turned and had caused death in recorded cases. Judge rushed toward his pursuers tol Roosevelt stood his ground until his magazine was Hoffman for the defence questioned Prof. Withaus closely on this point. He drew from him the admission that 400 grains of chloral by drate had been taken with impunity. circumstances of these extreme instances were not brought out, so that the admission form. On the question of the effects of alcosolic poison, however, Judge Hoffman was not se successful. Prof. Witthaus flatly declared that he did not believe a person could drink enough champagne and Manhattan cocktails to kill ham

The asking of these questions with the nsistance upon them by the counsel for the defence was the first clear indication of what the counsel for the accused will presumably rely on to save the prisoners from the gallows, and it caused a good deal of interest for that reason. The lawyers for the defence have a chemist who has been in constant attendance at the trial and who has carefully watched all the testimony of the State's experts, sugquestions for the prisoners' attorneys to ask.

One thing as regards the defence may be set down as a positive fact. Judge Francis Scott, counsel for the accused, said at the close of court this afternoon that all of the three prisoners would be put upon the stand. It is not at all unlikely, in vew of the swiftness with which Jersey Justice moves, that all these witnesses may be called upon to-day, in that event ti-day's proceedings cannot full to be projette of dramatic incidents. There was a little intimation on the part of Proseexamination under such circumstances would be. This was when Death himself took the stand for a few moments in regard to the admission or non-admission of confessions which he is alleged to have made to four detectives connected with the Paterson police force. The question areas as to whether or not Death had made these confessions voluntarily. The detectives swore that they had neither made promises nor uttered threats. On cross examination there was, on the part of one of them, Detective Taylor, a certain dubiousness which apparently raised a doubt in Judge Dixon's mind. At the end of their examination the atmonized that he was inclined to admit the testimony of the confessions, but that the counsel for the defence had an opportunity to offer any evidence that they chose to submit to offset that of the detectives. On this proposition Death was called to the stand. He denied that he had made any admissions to the detectives in contravention of his first story to them, without being influenced to this change by specific promises of the detectives.

This opened the way to Prosecutor Emiley for a merciless cross examination. In spite of the objections of counsel for the defence, all of which were overruled by Judge Dixon, the Prosecutor led Death over the route taken by the carriage which here the four necused and the unconscious girl to the road-house on the Rock road, thence to the place of the culmination of the crime, thence to the place of the culmination of the crime, thence to the place mear the Alyen cehouses where her hody was finally thrown out. Death, at the end of this ordeal, which can hardly be other than a triffe as compared with what he and his fellow accursed will undergo if they take the stand in their own defence, was in anything but a composed condition. Considered as a sample of what may be executed hands, it is certain that the three cutor Emby yesterday of what the cross-examination under such circumstances would

SOME DRAMATIC INCIDENTS.

The incident, however, was but one in the series of dramatic events which occurred during aesterday's session. To begin with, the prisoners themselves were in anything but the trim, almost jamity cendition in which they faced the jury on Monday. Perhaps Campbell looked the best of the trio, that showed the effects of a bad night. McAlister had entirely lost his semi-deflant bearing. His face was vellow and haggard, with great rings under the eves, and Death was so nervous that he could with difficulty sil still this chair. He, too, was worn and and the same telistate rings under his even campbell had lost his fresh color, but was comparatively composed in demensor. At one time, while Detective Mcherry was testifying to a conversation which Death was alleged to have had on the morning after he was first helderd up, Death completely lost control of himself. His twit has and nervous movements to his chair had become more and more marked. His lits were dead with and he frequently moistened them by quick, nervous series of his locate, accompanied inversable by a various toes of the head and twitching of the face. Finally, in a low had year in a realist at he.
